Tokyo is a famous city. There are a few good buildings and impressive temples; there are a few parks worth visiting. Everything has to be small in Tokyo: houses, rooms, shops. Long side streets consist of tiny houses only and this often creates a toy-like, with small women tip-toeing along in their kimonos. Tokyo at night is very different place from Tokyo in daytime. Millions of neon signs are switched on and nowhere in the world is more attractive. A town is not its buildings alone; it is an atmosphere, its pleasure, its sadness, its madness, and above all its people. Tokyo may lack architectural beauty but it has character and excitement; it is alive. I found it mysterious and lovable city.
